What is Association of European Cancer Leagues (ECL) Youth Ambassador programme?

ECL Youth Ambassador programme brings together students and young professionals interested in cancer prevention and motivated to share this enthusiasm with their peers across Europe. They represent ECL in their home country and with their activities promote the European Code Against Cancer.

The aims are:

- to harness the networks of each youth ambassador to disseminate the recommendations of the European Code Against Cancer;
- to understand, from young people themselves, what works and what doesn't work when communicating cancer prevention messages;
- to offer training and support for youth ambassadors to enable them to develop their health advocacy skills;
- encourage the sharing of knowledge and experience between youth ambassadors.

Who can be Youth Ambassador?

Youth ambassadors can be students, professionals, or volunteers from any relevant discipline to health promotion and diseases prevention. The key requirement is that ambassadors can demonstrate their passion for health promotion, and are willing to disseminate and amplify the messages of the European Code Against Cancer.

What does being Youth Ambassador involve?

Youth ambassadors are expected to be involved in the following tasks:

- engage in at least one activity during the year to promote the European Code Against Cancer and provide feedback on the activity to the ECL secretariat;
- commit to attending the annual workshop, which is held in June or July each year;

Ambassadors will be encouraged to share ideas and experiences between other Youth Ambassadors and ECL - an exchange of information is facilitated through regular teleconferences as well as Youth Ambassador Facebook group and e-mail correspondence. To highlight the activities of the ambassadors dedicated newsletter is published twice per year. Additional opportunities to participate in events and conferences are made available on an ad-hoc basis.
